In addition, they also asked questions about the economy and issues of interest to small business owners on their monthly poll. While small business owners have concerns that are consistent year-to-year, there were a few areas where businesses saw a substantial shift in those polled. One such area is income. While last year around 15% of small business owners surveyed said they struggled to maintain or increase the income of their business during the past year, that percentage jumped to 31% this year. According to the NFIB, there is a reason behind this increased concern. "Between 2010 and 2014, the number of people filing first-time business income tax returns increased from 18 million to 21 million. A significant number of these filers were small-business owners," says Jeff Wulfsohn, NFIB chief economist. "The tax filing increase, coupled with slowing income growth among non-filing small businesses, contributed to a negative business cycle that has lasted almost five years. This rise in tax filings and the number of small-business owners eligible for the Earned Income Tax Credit helped to drive the increase in small-business income growth." Wulfsohn went on to explain that this new survey, while a great tool for businesses, also showed that the economy needs to continue to show signs of improvement for the trend to reverse. "What we saw in the results is that despite the tax issue, the economy was still struggling, and 70% of the respondents said it was just a matter of time before the economy started to recover," he says. "However, the business owners who were polled also saw slow job creation, a weak labor market and high levels of uncertainty for the future, all of which clouded their optimism that the economy
